Okay, I understand. This section emphasizes that because there are no standard treatments or FDA-approved medications for methedrone/synthetic cathinone withdrawal, and due to the lack of specific detox protocols, the physician's comprehensive understanding of the individual's overall health (as detailed in Section 6) is crucial for determining a safe and appropriate care plan.

Okay, I understand. You want me to provide safety information related to methedrone (or its discontinuation) using only the following terms, and without softening the language:

*   not optional
*   mandatory
*   do not run this module
*   medical help is not failure

Here's how I can use those terms in a safety context related to methedrone discontinuation:

This is a good start to outlining potential adverse effects and when to seek medical attention related to methedrone use. Here's a breakdown of why it's helpful and some suggestions for improvement:

Strengths:

* Clear Differentiation: You clearly distinguish between expected side effects (low mood, fatigue, sleep disruption) and potentially dangerous ones requiring immediate attention.
* Specificity: You list specific symptoms that should raise concern, including cardiovascular issues (rapid heartbeat, high blood pressure

This passage highlights the unique challenges of discontinuing methedrone compared to other medications. Here's a breakdown:

*   Severity of Withdrawal: While the withdrawal from methedrone might be severe, it's not necessarily more severe than withdrawals from other substances. The key difference lies in how it's managed.
*   Importance of Complete Disclosure: Successful and safe discontinuation hinges on an open and honest conversation with a physician about all medications and substances being taken, both [illegible]
